Man Who Is Revolutionizing Russia

By W. L. Brown,

"Years of labor, labor, as you well know, doctor, that was most arduous to me, at times, during my life in San Francisco, where we lived and thought together, seems to me about to reap its reward. All Russia is aflame with the fever of revolt against tyranny. Suffrage seems to be almost within the grasp of the people. An uprising, with which nothing in the history of the empire is liable to compare, is now threatening Russia. The seed that has been so often sown is at last sprouting. I feel that my own labors were not in vain. My pen is working now more vigorously than for years THURSDAY, FRIDAY AND SATUR- and my heart beats nervously as I anxiously yearn for that first hour of freedom that all Russians will enjoy when that awful reign of tyranny is destroyed." Certain that the hour of emancipa-tion of his countrymen is at hand, Dr. Nicholas Russel, once a prominent resident of this city, and now working night and day in the Far East to realize an ambition that he has fostered for years, thus writes to a fellow practitioner in his former place of

The news from St. Petersburg lately has frequently mentioned the name of Russel. It has told of the secret issuance of his propagandas that have kindled the fire of hatred among his countrymen and stirred them to revoiutionary action. First he was skirting along the southern borders of Russia. Next he was compelled to seek refuge in Japan, where we have since learned of his work among the Russian prisoners of war, who, thirty-thousand strong, several days ago demonstrated their sympathy for the revolutionists in Russia by singing the "Marseillaise" and waiving red banners bearing the symbols of liberty, as they marched through the detention camps.

Few of the readers of the dispatches from the Far East have probably recognized in this propagator of revolt the same Dr. Nicholas Russel, a distinguished and cultured oculist, who practiced for a number of years in this city, with his offices in the Phelan building, and was for a time foremost in a local fight against the the Russian Consul, who had been drite Innocente. Aided by a sister, then but 16 years old, he escaped from Kieff one night, disguised as a Mahommedan, and fled to Roumania.

From Roumania the young fugitive went to Bulgaria, thence to Greece, where he married the woman who has since shared with him the perils attending his frequent journeys to the Russian borders, and they then went to Paris. At the end of several years' practice as a physician in the French capital the doctor and his wife came to San Francisco. Mrs. Russel was an attractive woman, who rapidly surrounded herself with new-made friends, who will readily recall the happy social events they enjoyed as the guest of this entertain-

> It was early in 1890 that Dr. Russel first gained prominence through the charges he made against Bishop Vladimir of the Greco-Russian church on Powell street. They were preceded by the withdrawal of the doctor and his wife from the church and were followed by Russel's excommunication. By this time two factions in the church had become arrayed against each other and a bitter war ensued, during which the edifice caught fire one night and was partially destroyed. This incident provoked more bitter criminations and for a time it was feared that blood might be spilled. Bishop Vladimir was arrested on serious charges, but these were never pressed. Libel suits were also instituted. About this stage of the controversy
